This project is part of a wider series of changes by the city in its efforts to further control nighttime noise and public alcohol consumption in the most affected areas by informing tourists. Inspired by similar actions in other cities such as Amsterdam, the campaign addresses inappropriate behavior by tourists in Prague's historical centre, so as not to disturb residents. 2019 saw the first-ever “enjoy and respect” campaign, in which the signs on the fruit trees transformed this area of the city into a romantic fairyland.

The creation of the new curtain was a chapter of its own. A team of master craftsmen, led by Ladislav Žebár as a master of the period-style restoration, installed period-style seats that contain individual titling equipment; floors and wall decorations were restored based on old documentation. In addition, some of the dressing rooms, rehearsal rooms with excellent acoustics, a stage technology including a unique turntable, climate control, and a 600-ton rowing staircase, on which are placed seven gradually diminishing mirrors that will instantly turn you into a very small person.

In June 2018, the Prague State Opera opened the newly restored Estates Theatre on January 5, 1888. Also making a reappearance on the Prague State Opera stage is one of its most popular productions in recent times: Wagner’s Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg. Today, along with Dvořák’s Stabat Mater and Wagner’s Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, the Estates Theatre has also become one of Prague’s many major sites for important international events. In the coming season, the Estates Theatre will stage the premiere of the regional premiere of Verdi’s Macbeth.

The green spaces of Petřín Hill (237 m high) are an exquisite part of Prague and fundamentally shape the visual appearance of the city. In contrast with the hustle and bustle of the city below, the Petřín Hill offers an oasis of tranquility and a place to escape from the daily grind. This park offers an area of open land with beautiful views of the city – including the 1891–1896 Petřín Lookout Tower, which offers a panoramic view of the city. Just below the Petřín Tower, the 19th-century St. Michael’s Church of the Archangel Michael was erected. Among the Municipal House–Smetana Hall, the St. Michael’s Church of the Archangel Michael is one of the most interesting buildings in Prague.
